A soldier in the Canadian Army and part of Elijah and Xavier's unit. Elijah doesn't tell Xavier, but before he ran to join his unit, he took his "skinning knife from its sheath and pulled the man's hair back," scalping him with "careful motions." An Ojibwe soldier in the Canadian military during World War I. Elijah and Xavier meet the Indian in a pub in the French village of Lens—the only other Anishnabe they meet during the war—and he reminds them that there are many Anishnabe soldiers in France. "We all want to be warriors again," the Indian says. Everyone "over there" behaved "in ways it is best not to speak of." The Indian Character Analysis. Elijah is in his glory. Word reaches them that Thompson has died of his injuries sustained in Corporal Thompson. Niska comes across the wemistikoshw trapper in the woods, and he follows her back to her lodge. Elijah's mother dies of a "coughing sickness" when Elijah is a small boy, and he goes to live with the nuns at the residential school. There, Elijah learns to speak English "like one of [the nun's] bishops," and becomes friends with Xavier, another Death stares Elijah in the face and he is indifferent. Rain falls as Xavier sits by the fire. They make love and have a longstanding relationship. Like Niska, he does not sleep. Niska thinks of her own father and how he would tell her stories when she was "scared" or "hurt." Niska has "no medicine" to help Xavier, but she will "find something" in her "memories." One night, a local awawatuk (Indigenous hunter) arrives to get Niska's help when a clan member "goes windigo" (is possessed by an evil Anishnabe spirit). Xavier's best friend and the antagonist in Three Day Road. Once Xavier is calmer, she drags him near the fire. Elijah becomes extremely seasick on the ship, and Grey Eyes injects him with morphine. Niska is constructing a sweat lodge to purify Xavier and bring his body, mind, and Grey Eyes Character Analysis. He "runs his tally higher" when he returns from "no man's land," "but his word is enough now." A French trapper. When sleep does come, the dead accuse Xavier of "acts [he] did not perform" and "some that [he] did." He put the skin in On the battlefield, Elijah and Xavier fight two wars—"the one facing the enemy" and "the one facing what they do to the enemy." "Dead friends" Xavier doesn't "want to see come to visit" in his sleep. Grey Eyes is addicted to morphine, and he first introduces Elijah to the drug on the ship to Europe to fight in the war. Grey Eyes works as a spotter for Elijah Whiskeyjack.
