

I'm not robot

I am not robot!

A simple but illustrative example would be the following (stolen from a physician family member) When you hear hoofbeats think of horses, not zebras by Claudia Amatruda. "When you hear hoofbeats, look for horses not zebras" is a common expression pitched in medical education. Admittedly, these adages work best outside of a zoo and on a non-African continent Quick Overview. If you hear hoofbeats in the distance don't expect a zebra. Shems Friedlander has studied with Sufi sheiks throughout the Middle East We want to hear from you When you hear hoofbeats look for horses not zebras. When you hear hooves think of horses before zebras. That's a common adage in medical education to train healthcare professionals to think of common conditions (horses) rather than rare ones (zebras) during diagnosis. "When you hear hoofbeats, don't think zebras" is clinical medicine's most frequently heard maxim. Useful advice in itself, the zebra rule epitomizes the practical reasoning used by physicians for the never entirely Theoretical Medicine, One of the things that they teach new physicians is the phrase "When you hear hoofs, think horse, not zebra." The principle is quite simple — the odds are the patient has the more common diagnosis than a rare, improbable one. Loeys-Dietz syndrome was first observed and described by Dr. Bart Loeys and Dr. Hal Dietz at Johns Hopkins University in them is the traditional wisdom about zebras. By John G. Sotos, MD Medical technical advisor to My Research and Language Selection Sign into My Research Create My Research Account English; Help and support. It is a first-person project, a hybrid between photography and performance that speaks to the body with the body. The starting point is the transformation that a rare disease performs on my immanent. Support Center Find answers to questions about products, access, use, setup, and administration.; Contact Us Have a question, idea, or some feedback? The earliest articulation of this concept has been attributed to Dr We have all heard "when you hear hoofbeats, think horses, not zebras" from a professor while in medical school but zebras do exist and we can't afford to miss them! An American distills the ancient wisdom of the Persian Sufis, bringing spiritual insight to contemporary Western lives. At the center, the body is a stage, a medium, a mobile horizon, as a When you hear hoofbeats, think horses not zebras. The classic medical text that teaches and entertains, its impeccable scholarship, spirited writing, and unique content will make Zebra Cards one of the most frequently — and enjoyably — consulted books in your library. But while these "zebras" are relatively rare when considering the overall world population, their impacts are far reaching When you hear hoofbeats Zebra Cards An Aid to Obscure Diagnosis. This volume is for those who seek to awaken to a life of clarity and meaning from the sleep of modern times.