nominees. It is one of the last surviving literary co-ops from the '60s and '70s. The Pushcart Prize has been a labor of love and independent spirits since its founding. Our legacy is assured by donations to our Fellowships endowment. This hit-or-miss collection gathers stories, essays, and poems published by small presses and magazines. With just three entries in translation, including Polish poet Krystyna Dabrowska's middling "Travel Agency," and with some prize winners having nominated each other, there's an insular and self-congratulatory air to the proceedings and the reflections fade like the sun, and I try not to look, but I feel all the suns who have died in this place. Read their stories/poems and wish them luck! Magazines and presses from around the world are able to nominate up to a total of six. Every volume contains an index of past selections, plus lists of outstanding presses with addresses. We are happy to announce that we have nominated four pieces from our second and third issue for the Pushcart Prizes!
