In fact, Kirsch's sonnet is an example of another uncommon sonnet type: the stretched sonnet, which refers to sonnets that extend to more lines. The title of the sonnet refers to a Sonnet XIV. Not from the stars do I my judgement pluck; And yet methinks I have astronomy, But not to tell of good or evil luck, Of plagues, of dearths, or seasons' quality; Nor can I fortune to brief minutes tell, Pointing to each his thunder, rain and wind, Or say with princes if it shall go well

Sonnet Synopsis: As astrologers predict the future from the stars, so the poet reads the future in the "constant stars" of the young man's eyes, where he sees that if the young man breeds a son, truth and beauty will survive; if not, they die when the young man dies. But from thine eyes my knowledge I derive, And constant stars in them I read such art Nor can I fortune to brief minutes tell, to brief minutes tell = predict with minute by minute accuracy Pointing to each his thunder, rain and wind, Pointing to each = appointing (or pointing out) for each person; thunder, rain and wind these are taken as being symbolic of bad times in a person's life Sonnet XIV.
